This response to the FOIA seems to show that we need to change our language. While the National Team for the Rainbow event is not one of our 17 National Incident Management Teams that we use for fire and other emergencies, and this wasn't an official "incident" (i.e. had a P number) they do call themselves that and their logo used this year indicates that.

To his credit, Bill VanB raised this concern early on...

National Incident Management

If we have a team, I'd vote that we call it something like "National Event Management Team" or something similar. I can see where the requestors of the info are going to at least be scratching their heads and wondering what kind of games we are up to.
